Dec. 14, 1945

Mrs. Geo. Logsdon,
3415 Country Club Place,
Wichita, Kansas.

Dear Cousin:

It has taken a long time but I have at last assembled data on eight generations of the Wilson family and enclose a copy for your record. I had hoped to trace the line farther back than here given but it seems hopeless. I had a lot of fun and learned a lot of interesting history in going through the old records, and if it proved to be as much a history of the Quaker Church as of the Wilson family you can readily see why.

And if I have given more prominence to my own immediate family it is because I have more data on them.

It is not of record that our line ever attained wealth or historical prominence and in modern times they apparently behaved themselves pretty well, although those old Danes must have been a rough lot. Our folks seem to have taken their marriage vows seriously for I find only three divorces and no second marriages among the Wilsons proper.

Your father can no doubt add a great many interesting details for the edifications of his children and grandchildren.

I extend to you the Season's Greetings and remain

Your cousin

FROM

WILSON GENEALOGICAL DATA

By J. Montgomery Seaver

########

The name Wilson is derived from the Anglo-Saxon name "Wille" (later William) which signifies "will" or "determination". From the original custom of calling a man by his father's name came "Wilson".

The original Wilson ancestors, who bore the name, came from Denmark and were said to have been descendants of a "Prince of Denmark". They settled in the Orkneys in a remote period. Later their descendants settled in Cheshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire (England) and in Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

The parental coat of arms is a wolf which the Wilsons carried in Denmark, and in England during the "subjugation" of England by the Danes in the 9th century. But upon the revolution in England and the thorough defeat and destruction of the invaders by Alfred the Great in 906, those of the name who escaped, fled to France and added to their arms a chief sable in commemoration of the bloody misfortune that befell the other part of the family. Some of them purchased land in France and seventyyears later joined William the Conquerer in his invasion of England in 1066.

The name is very numerous and wide-spread, being found in all levels of society from nobility to commoner. There is estimated to be more than 275,000 persons of the name in the United States, alone, 97% of whom are Protestant.

The first authentic Wilson of historical prominence seems to be Thomas Wilson 1525-1581, an English statesman and critic.

The branch of the family now being considered may be assumed as dating from about the middle of the 17th century and its history is closely interwoven with that of the religious Society of Friends or Quakers.

For the better understanding of the Quakers' connection with historical events this CHRONOLOGY is presented.

1649 George Fox, founder of the Society began his public ministry.
1652 Nucleus of Quaker Church formed in North Lancashire, England.
1656 July. Two women Quakers, Mary Fisher and Ann Austin, arrived at Boston, imprisoned five weeks, expelled. Eight others sent back to England. Sect continuously persecuted until Toleration Act, 1689.

1657-8 Massachusetts passed laws prohibiting immigration of Quakers.
1660 Charles II ascended throne. Harsh laws passed against non-conformists.
1664 March. Sixty Quaker convicts shipped to America on "Black Eagle"
1665 Black Plague swept London.
1666 Great Fire of London. Quaker Church systematically organized, probably hastened by these disasters.

1668 Wm. Penn joined Quakers.
1671-3 George Fox visited America.

1672 March 15. Charles II suspended Ecclesiastical Penal Laws.
Many Quakers released from prison.
Henry Phillips and wife the only Quakers in Albemarle colony, N.C.
1675 John Fenwick and company of Quakers settled Salem, N.J.
1677 Pasquotank MM set up in North Carolina.
1677-8 800 Quakers settled Burlington, N.J.

1679 Quakers in Albemarle colony increased in numbers; remonstrated to Lord Proprietors and appealed for protection from tyrannical elements.
1680 Perquimans MM set up.
1682 Philadelphia founded by William Penn.
1685 James II ascended throne.
1687 " " declared for liberty of conscience.
1689 Beginning of William and Mary reign.
Toleration Act ends persecution of Quakers for non-attendance at church.
1695-9 John Archdale first Quaker Governor of Albemarle Colony. Many Quakers there at that time. Their condition improved.
1704 Quakers excluded from North Carolina General Assembly.
1707 Exclusion Act repealed.
1711 Quakers again excluded from General Assembly and deprived of other privileges.
1775-83 American Revolution.
1792 Back Creek MM set up, Randolph County, N.C.
Slavery question assumed serious proportions.
North Carolina Quakers began westward movement.

1803 Joseph Wilson and family move to Randolph County, N.C.
1837 John Wilson and family emigrate to Indiana.

WILSON FAMILY

The Quakers arose ata time when religious intolerance, bigotry and hatred were at their worst in England, in fact, the creation of the sect was due to and in protest of the intolerable conditions of the times. Their members were ridiculed, findd, imprisoned and cruelly persecuted along with other non-conformists. Their creed was well calculated to enrage the authorities in power, by whom they were regarded as a stiff-necked, stubborn, unruly lot of religious fanatics, to be exterminated, if at all possible. Their worst offenses were refusal to pay tithes to the Church of England, refusal to take an oath of allegiance, or to remove hats in the presence of royalty, and refusal to bear arms or to use force even in their own defense. Persecution, however, only bound them more strongly together and caused them to seek religious freedom in the new world.

"Sufferings of the Quakers" two volumes by Besse, published in London, 1753, recites many instances of legalized persecution throughout the British Isles and the American colonies in the early days of Society. Volume II quotes a letter from George Wilson under close confinement as a non-conformist, in "that Dirty Dungeon in James Towne (Va.)" dated 17th, 3rd mo. 1662. In Vol. I the Wilson family name occurs 54 times, 40 of them in the counties of Bedfordshire to Lincolnshire, England and all victims of persecution. But among the persecutors also is found one Edward Wilson, Esq. Justice of the Peace in Westmoreland County, who issued several warrants for the arrests of Quakers on various pretexts in 1684.

There were many Wilsons in America before the Quakers. Thomas Wilson, age 27, came to the new world in 1620 in the ship "Abigail", this antedating the Pilgrims by some months. He was living at "James City", Virginia, as indicated by a "muster" or census of January 24, 1624. John Wilson was living at "Flourdien hundred", Virginia, February 26, 1623. The passenger lists of ships sailing from London in 1635 to Virginia include many Wilsons. It seems improbably however, that any of these early arrivals were progenitors of the branch with which we are concerned.

William Penn is popularly regarded as the founder of Quakerism in America, but others were here long before him, in fact, the Quakers had become so numerous that several colonies passed exclusion laws against them as early as 1658, (see chronology).

The group which interests us and with which we first indentify the Wilson family settled, about 1680, in the northeastern portion of North Carolina in what are now Perquimans and Pasquotank Counties along the north shore of Albemarle Sound. The colony was at one time known as Albemarle. The following extracts from historical reference works are of interest:

Williamson's History of North Carolina - "The first settlers near Pasquotank and Perquimans were chiefly emigrants from Virginia and dissenters from the establishe Church of England. Many of them were Quakers."

John Archdale was the first Quaker governor of Albemarle County;he came from Charleston between 1695 and 1699. Many Quakers were in Albemarle.

Ashe - History of North Carolina says: In March , 1660, the General Assembly prohibited Quakers from coming into the Colony and up to 1672 Henry Phillips and wife were the only Quakers in Albemarle; by 1679 they had increased in numbers so that they remonstrated with the Lord Proprietors and appealed for protection from the tyrannical and lawless elements which harassed them. Their religious tenets and policy of passive resistence made them easy victims of unscrupulous governors and local ruffians.

There was no great influx of population to Albemarle from beyond the seas. Accessions had come from Virginia and neighboring colonies, some in search of religious freedom, others for economic reasons. Some in William and Mary's reign had come from England but they settled near Charleston.

"At the beginning of the century (1700) the Quakers in Perquimans were numerous, extremely ignorant, proud and ambitious, and consequently ungovernable. Pasquotank was also largely peopled by Quakers."

Their fortunes alternately rose and fell throughout the Colonial period until at last their religious peculiarities were legally recognized and they were excused from military service and the taking of oaths. Their affirmation was accepted as binding and their neighbors came to regard a Quaker's affirmation as more dependable than many other peoples' sworn oath.

S. G. Fisher's "Quakers Colonies" says: "Wherever Quakers are found, they are useful and steady citizens. Their eminence seems out of all proportion to their comparatively small numbers."

After the American Revolution, the slavery question began to plague the people. The Quakers were o posed to human bondage but North Carolina, with its large tobacco planters, w s a slave state and the Quakers of Perquimans and Pasquotank again found themselves unpopular with their neighbors and sought more friendly lands.

Weeks, in his preface to "Southern Quakers and Slavery" says: "The importance of that great wave of Quaker migration which began to rise in Virginia and the Carolinas during the closing decades of the 18th century, (seems never to have been duly appreciated) and sweeping across the mountains for the next 80 years planted some of the first settlements in the then new Northwest and has since made that country the greatest stronghold of Quakerism in the world."

p. 1. Protest against Slavery in Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia took the form of migration about 1800. They left old lands in the south and removed to the free Northwest, Ohio and Indiana. These emigrants composed middle and lower ranks of society who had few or no slav s and could not compete. It was estimated in 1850 one-third of the population of Indiana was made up of North Carolinians and their children.

A considerable number removed to central North Carolina before 1810 and in 1811 a definite migration tot he west began. In 1846 only 55 members remained at Symons Creek and many of the meetings had been "laid do n" (abandoned) or combined with others.

In the later chapters Weeks describes several routes taken by the emigrants but we do not know which one the Wilson's chose. Their first move was to Back Creek Meeting in RandolphCounty, North Carolina, in 1803. The next generation moved to Indiana in 1837. I have heard my paternal grandmother, Mary (Hill) Wilson say she accompanied her peopledown the Ohio River on a barge when she was a little girl.

The pioneers' arrival and settlement in Indiana, with personal anecdotes and local color is excellently set forth by Edgar M. Baldwin inhis "Making of a Township", published by the Edgar Baldwin Printing Company, 1917.

About 1902, four pioneer families of Fairmount, inaugurated the annual Wilson-Hill-Bogue-Baldwin joint reunion. It was popular from the beginning, but later attracted so many strangers from miles around that the attendance became unmanageable and after about a decade the custom was discontinued.

WILSON FAMILY

In tracing the genealogy of this branch of the family I cannot, with certainty, go farther back than Joseph, born Nov. 9, 1760, son of John and Rachel.

A Grant County, Indiana, newspaper printed 1906, describing the family reunion of that year, states that John Wilson, father of Joseph, lived in England in 1721 but I can find no supporting evidence for such statement.

Dorothy L. Gilber , genealogist of North Carolina yearly Meeting of Friends, Guilford College, N. C. writes, Nov. 13, 1945: "There were several branches of the Wilson family in that (Perquimans) County in the early days and the names of John and Joseph occur often but theinformation is fragmentary and I cannot be certain of the line back of the various John Wilsons ..... There is probably some connection between the various Wilson families but it is not clear in the available records."

The above corrobarates the report of Webster Parry, of Richmond, Indiana, in 1905.

I cannot find any support for the family tradition that our progenitors accompanied William Penn to America. The name does not appear among the lists of Penn's company, nor among those of Fenwick's colony in New Jersey. It seems quite probable that our forebears may have preceded Penn.

The line of descent, insofar as I can trace it conforms to the following genealogy:
